One-Week Faculty Development Programme- FDP (Online) 28th Sep. to 3rd Oct.2020

The issues surrounding COVID-19 and various policy responses to its salience in communities across the world are closely related to education. Confronted with the complex, exponential crisis of the pandemic, colleges and universities around the world have been closed for instruction on campuses and they are moving toward online remote course instruction and learning. Educational institutions are jostling to cope up with online teaching and learning. Academic institutions have the potential to emerge from this pandemic as places of compassion and wisdom. They can become places where recognition of diversity, equality and inclusion are the premises of education and where humanity can flourish with trans-disciplinary humility. There are opportunities for a new educative focus. In what sense is the COVID-19 pandemic 'new'? When the initial shock has passed, what can we expect for the future? What lessons do these insights hold for education in India? How do we need to rethink and re-imagine issues of education and pedagogy? How will this lead to the emergence of a balanced society? How should we restructure the basic purposes of education, and the pedagogic models better suited to the ever-present possibilities of insecurity, threat and everlasting change? Thus, there are a number of questions related to pedagogy and education that deserve our attention. This One-Week FDP seeks to answer some of these questions and provides the participants information about R&D, ICT Tools, CPD etc.. You are invited to be a part of this One-Week Faculty Development Programme, by registering yourself well in advance.
